

THE TOP 5 JOBS SEARCH WEBSITES in the PHILIPPINES

Job search sites in the Philippines has provided significant support and aid to almost all Filipino jobseekers either local or overseas career opportunities.

Due to the increase in recruitment competition, having a website and advertise in some social media communities is considered an edge from other recruitment firms.

This list will give the readers some ideas on what job search websites are most likely being used by jobseekers, so brief descriptions and comments is being provided. If you feel like you wanted to see the sites for your self i've put the links that will bring you directly to their sites. So here is the list... Goodluck and Happy job hunting!

Jobstreet

Do you know Lina? Well, come and visit jobstreet.com so you can get to know her. For information, I got a couple of jobs before through Jobstreet.com. Founded in Malaysia in 1997, and for over 20 years, Jobstreet has proven their worth as one of Asia's leading online employment marketplace helping facilitating the matching and communication of job opportunities between jobseekers and employers, in Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore, Indonesia and Vietnam. You can download their mobile app from Google Play Store for android phones and Apple App Store for Iphones. Anyway, Lina's really nice.

Kalibr

Their site is simple but its really easy to use. Their top 30 companies' icon are already displayed on their home page so you don't have to worry about searching for the best in their list and exert more effort on thinking and typing names on the search engine (you know, millennial matters). I also noticed that they are offering jobs in the local government units and other government institutions. Come and visit www.kalibr.com or you can also download their mobile app in Google Play Store and Apple App Store if you are an Iphone user.

Workabroad

Tired of looking job here in the Philippines, workabroad.ph is for you. There's a ton of jobs waiting for you overseas and this might be the turning point of your life and be one of our country's living heroes as an OFW. Workabroad is one of the leading overseas job sites in the Philippines. When I visited their site, I was able to see success stories of OFWs who landed good jobs abroad using their services so you may use them as references. They offer more than 17,000 overseas jobs all over the world. They've got search engine which can provide easy access to job vacancies and generate jobs of your interest from countries A-Z, you name it. Come and visit www.workabroad.ph. And oh, don't forget to ring me some chocolates when you got home.

Facebook

Millions of Filipinos got their own Facebook accounts and this is the reason why most of these job search sites are using it to advertise and get more audiences to visit their sites. Certain companies are also directly recruiting talents from Facebook community and they have their own unique way of inviting applicants due to the increase in competition especially in the BPO industry. By subscribing or simply liking their pages you can get notifications of their job openings while you are browsing your ex's profile and posting relationship goals.

OnlineJobsPhilippines.com

For those who wanted to work at home or looking for additional source of income doing part-time aside from your regular job you can try visiting onlinejobsphilippines.com. They are offering jobs which you can do online at home or wherever you are as long as you have your laptop and a reliable internet connection. OJP also provides free online skills training, eBooks and other tools/resources for those who wanted to engage in online marketing. This is the entrepreneurial part of their site so if you want to give it a try they can help you get started on your own online business.

Disclaimer: The list will not guarantee you any job, it's up to you jobseekers on how you will get the job. I might also release a guide on how you can handle a JOB INTERVIEW and land that job you've always dreamed of.
